COURSE DESCRIPTION

To develop a thorough understanding of the lighting techniques the student will need in a career as a photojournalist. That includes the use of accessory camera flash, the mastery and manipulation of available light, and the successful use of mixed light source techniques. And as a photojournalist, you're likely to have assignments outside the realm of "breaking" or "spot" news, and this course will equip you with the skills necessary for portraiture and feature photography. For those students not on a photojournalism course track, you will find this class valuable, as it takes the use of light well beyond the basics.

EQUIPMENT REQUIREMENTS

You must supply your own professional or semi-professional digital SLR cameras, cards, lens(es) and dedicated accessory flash. You will find it to your advantage to own your own wireless trigger (Cowboy Studio NPT-04-4 Wireless trigger, $20.78) and stand/reflector/umbrella kit (Cowboy Studio Single Flash Shoe Swivel Bracket Kit with 1 Mounting Bracket, 1 Umbrella, and 1 Stand, $34.85—Be sure it has the “N” bracket!), available from Amazon.com. If you don’t already own an accessory flash and don’t want to invest in (an expensive one) one from your camera’s manufacturer, consider the YongnuoYN-560III ($71 for Canon or Nikon) from Amazon.com. It won’t take years and years of wear and tear, but will suffice while you’re around UF!

Camera, lens, card and flash are required. Point-and-shoot cameras are not acceptable for this class, and you will not be allowed to use the pop-up flash on your DSLR camera for any assignment.
